Honokone, March 10th, 1878.

THE point which turned up for discussion at the recent meeting of the Hongkong Insurance Company, as to how the company should be constituted in order to secure the necessary attendance for conducting the business, is one of considerable importance, although not altogether new in Hongkong. The Chairman of the meeting on finding that it was impossible to obtain the necessary attendance, probably took the Best course in putting it to the shareholders present whether the business should go on; but it is to be questioned whether he was quite correct in assuming that let out of gool on Friday last, was again cent quered character. The hitch has arisen No. 182 as having been up before on a similar chiefly from the fact of the shares being pretty evenly distributed, so that it becomes necessary to have something like one shareholder present for every five shares. Ship-street, at 12.30 p.m. of the 7th instant, Under such circumstances, it may be assumed that the interests of the Company, as a whole, will continue very well represented under the proposed new system. But there is another very simple means of avoiding the possibility of such a hitch occurring, which has been found to work satisfactorily in other companies, and might be adopted with advantage in addition to the plan proposed. It is that in the event of a sufficient back. number of shareholders not appearing the day they are called, the meeting-shall be adjourned for a reasonable period, and that the adjourned meeting may proceed to business, even if there is not the quorum on the 6th instant, one great coat, one awning, in Uruguay, and Buenos Ayres in the Argenrecognised as necessary at the first meeting. But these opportunities have been in great degree thrown any or misused. The most instructive example, and one of the most important, is to be found in the Scotch iron trade. For the last three years the demand for Seatch iron has been greatly increasing, and prices have been constantly rising; but in spite of the demand, the production has fallen off. What is the reason of ply with an increasing demand? Have our mine-owners, or ironmasters exhausted their enterprise or the cap wity of their mines; or are they indifferent to further successes? In many onses-as in India, Australia, and New Zealand-"the scarlet uniform" does "enliven the scene." The incidents vary in particulars rather than in essentials. Coolie kidnapping and slavery present one aspect to the Fijis and to the Chinese. Opium and successive conflicts bring innovations, and civil wars follow in natural sequence. But, however numerous the variants in these instruments of modern civilization and Christianity, the "East end Missionary" was right when he declared that " every heathen nation whose spiritual destitution the Bishop of London deplores has a material reason for rejecting our religious overtures," And equally true and significant is the conclusion that the "missionary goes to the heather as an ambassador" of a "kingdom which is not of this world," but, "finds himself received as the representative of a kingdom as worldly as trude, ironelads, and rifles can make it." It is not, however, on this aspect of missionary labour among the heathen that we would dwell. The "East-end Missionary" has said British Commission, will probably assist at the nearly all that need be said, and the moral to this that we are at liberty to use the first letter, which his letter-points is too plain to be and to take from it the aubstance of any statemissed. They see enruest and apparently sincers men l preach what they say is the true religion, and yet by turns oppose all that practically asserts its power and presence in the world outside the limits of their own special creed. Apart from the breaches in the theoretic nuity of the Church created by the separation of Greek Roman Catholic, and Protestant communities, how many are the avowed differences in Protestant belief? And us to the three greater divisions, how are they broken by doubt and distracted by the search after more certain grounds of faith? There is an old and a new Greek Church, as there is an old and a new Catholic faith. The tendencies of all, as in the Protestant Churches, are centrifugal, not concentric. Each particular section of the larger Obristian communities seems instinct with repellant force. Not only priesthoods are antagonistic, but all theology-whether of Apostles, Fathers, or Oreeds-shows the same disturbance. As one of the most elequent of modern Churchmen has observed, there has never been a time when the desire for sure grounds of faith and a true religion has been that the bulk of any civilized nation will consent to accept a life deprived of its ideal side.

Brahmine and Buddbists alike, there is felt to be a want of knowledge and a strong desire for intellectual conviction. We do not apeak of Mahommedans, large as their number is, both have arrived at as much certainty in regard to the truth of their own creed as man can ever hope to attain. Mahommedans have also their circle round mere questions of descent from Mahommed, and on minor points of practice, rather than fundamental doctrines and tenets slavery continue to come in from all parts of the prophet, with perfect faith and devout feeling. It is otherwise with the Brahmin and the Bud-It is reported that the American bankers in be observed in Western creeds, and of course A great anti-slavery meeting was held at the London loaned Napoleon £200,000 to facilitate with a proportionate weakness of faith. Sometimes this may be accompanied by a willingness to listen to the exponents of unew orced, but more frequently it seems to be marked by a feeling of universal doubt and despair of attaining any certainty in matters of religion. Both in the Eastern and Western hemispheres identical tendencies are at work-undermining old faiths and ploughing up the whole field of intellectual credence in unsien powers. If the breaking down of the old traditions and superstructures of faith leaves the Asiatic mind more open to new revelations of religious trath, it also renders it easy of access by scepticism. Ineradicable differences in those professing the Christian fai h suggest the absence of any certain knowledge of the truth here as elsewhere. The missionary's power to communicate anything more trustworthy than that which the heirs of the old civilization already possess is naturally discredited. This as regards the people. LANCET. Sir William Gull has taken exception to the comments of the Lancet upon his manifesto concerning the disease of the late Emperor Napoleon, and has done so in a manner with which it is extremely difficult to deal. In the first place be addressed a letter to The Times, in which journal our observations had been quoted, and said that the writer bad been " imperfectly informed of the circumstances." Next he wrote to the Editor of the Lancet a letter marked "private," containing certain statements in reference to the case. He was then informed that the word "private" provented his letter from being used in any way, and it was suggested that he should embody the statement contained in his note in some form that could be published in the columns of this journal. The reply to this was another letter containing the following passage:-" The facts communicated in my letter I marked 'private,' not that they may not be considered as known to you, but because I do not think it proper that I should personally justify myself before the profession." We infer from ment that may seem relevant to the matter in after the autopsy, if he had known that any powers of orgament, these differences are fatal was over, and he left as a matter of course, not dreaming of what was to follow. He reminds us that it is not the practice to hold these consultations, nor to publish statements of opinions on these occasions. As Sir William himself makes this assertion, we are bound to accept it unresevedly. But we may say at once that we would not have done so upon any less weighty testimony. With regard to the practice on these occasions," we must remind Sir William Gull that the death of the Emperor was an occasion per so, and that, when all Europe was eager to hear the results of the pos'-mortem examination, it would have been simply into asible for those who witnessed it to separate without some definite agreement as to the terms in which even the preliminary record should be southed. We are enrious to know how Sir William left the room. Did he do so without bidding farewell to his condintors, and without informing them of his intention to depart? Surely those who shortly afterwards sent a special messenger to London to obtain his signature would, if they had been aware of this intention, have striven to detain him for a time. Sir William next contests a statement which he attributes to us-that the opinion more general or earnest. Nor is it to be imagined which he expressed was only "a slight verbal change," If he had done us the ponour to read our observations carefully, be would The feeling that religion is a social necessity is have seen our contention to be that a slight verbal change would have embraced The cultivated Eastern races have in a more his opinion as well as that of the marked degree than Europeans this aspiration other signatories, and would have rendered his separate report superfluous. It is manifest that the insertion of the single word "prohigher Power among the superior class of bably," before the words " produced by the irritation of the vesical calculus," would have been sufficient for the purpose; for Sir William Gull would hardly have thought it necessary to deny the "probability" of a belief enterin Asia and Africa, because we believe they tained by all present at the post-mortom, save bimself. It seems, however, that we must not complaint for Sir William admits by implication that he read the document forwarded for great divisions and secturian hatreds, but these his signature "in baste," and that for some time be supposed it to stand for the (final) post-mortem record. He must have thought it a singularly elight and trivial one! Sir such is divide Christians. We see a physician holding almost the highest station open to his calling, and, as a censor of his College, doubly bound to be circomspect in all his ways, who yet hastily and unnecessarily places before the public a speculative difference about an insoluble problem ! If his convictions did not allow him to sign the memorandum presented to him, his absence

Sir William, when he wrote his separate memorandam, in thinking what was "due to himself," may have been for the moment oblivious of what was due to-others; and he certainly failed to realize the true status of even a successful obysician when he stands by the bedside of a deceased Emperor! -Laucet. THE FUNCTIONS OF MISSIONARIES. The Times (Jan. 4), in discussing Lord Lawrence's views on the missionary question, says -It cannot, then, see why a missionary cannot be taught medicine, or some handicraft or agricultural industry. These things, like the guspel itself, belong to all countries, and are everywhere appreciated. Even at home we are discarding many prejudices in these matters, and nothing is more common now than to hear of great lawyers, heads of large manufacturing establishments, workers of collieries, and country gentlemen having Bible classes and even leading public worship. India and Lord Lawrence know of the existence of the same order of volunteer Evangelists in Asia itself, With the changes past and impending at home, it licences issued by the clerk. Because a great would be rash to assume that there will always be a provision for the maintenance of such a special class as Lord Lawrence describes, she wern't, and that he would hit us on the What has hitherto been considered not only a great gain, but also a necessity, may one day be impossible. CHRONIC ALCOHOLISM. (Saturday Review.)

We are quite really to admit that decorum is as under :--of gentiomen speechless and staggering from the effects of heavy potations could not fail to have a degrading and brutalizing effect upon the society to which they belonged. It is morally an advance that men should be ashamed of being seen in this edious and filthy condition. But decorum may be in itself a snure, and it is well that the truth, however coarse, vulgar, and unpleasant it may be, should be faced. It must he remembered that the three-bottle and fourbottle men of other days were after all exceptional men, and a mere bandful in the community, and that, although most men then thought little of getting drunk, this was with a great many an indulgence which they allowed themselves not habitually, but only on special occasions and with intervals between. The main difference- between the drinking habits of the last generation and of the present would seem to be, that formerly men, when they sat down | On LONDON .to drink, drauk more at a time, while now men drink moderately, at a sitting, but, in sips or "nipa" drink a good deal during each day. Whether the modern babit is better than the old habit is a question which possesses only a * speculative interest. The important thing is, that the modern habit should be recognised ON NEW YORK .as vicious and unwholesome. We are aware that this is quite an old story now, and perhaps people may be tired of ata repetition. Unfortunately the necessity for speaking of it does not appear to have diminished. About a year ago the docture published a declaration respecting alcohol, insisting that, as a medicine, it ought to be prescribed with the same care and precision as any other powerful drug, and pointing out that its value as an article of diet was immensely overrated. The document also recommended legislation with a view to confine the use of alcohol within proper limits, and to promote habits of temperance. For our own part, weshould be disposed to rely much more confidently on the personal influence of the doctors themselves than on any kind of legislation. Something may be done by legislation to enforce order and decoram in the streets and in places of common resort, and to curtail the facilities for public drinking, but after all this is only making clean the outside of the plutter. Most reasonable persons will admit that the Licensing Act goes about as for in this direction as is practicable, if indeed it does not rather overshoot the mark. It is just because we are convinced of the powerlessness of legislation, because we distrust all violent coercive measures, have no faith in any reform which does not Shanghai Steam Navigation Company-Tis. 130 spring from voluntary restraints and an improval state of public opinion; that we feel Hongkong Gas Company's Shares-$65 per bound once more, at the risk of wearisome iteration, to call attention to the subject. The Excise returns, the statistics of original feverishness and excitement of social life, the drinking bars, and the marked increase of the number of reeling drunkards in the streets, Hongkong Pier and Godown Company,-30 all point to the same conclusion. It is impossible to doubt the growing intemperance of the working classes, Personal observation on such a point may sometimes be misleading, but the same story comes from all parts of the country. As a rule, high wages seem to mean only more drinking ; and drinking means wifebeating at home and fighting in the streets. Mr. Vernon Harcourt, who objects to the stringency of the Licensing Act, appears to think it necessary to argue that the country is really very temperate and sober. We have Yee-kee to travelling trader. as little liking for restrictive legislation as Mr. Harcourt, but we are no use in shutting our eyes to unpleasant facts. It is mecessary to distinguish between the bigotry and fanatioism fat to travelling trader. of the testutalers and the basis of truth which underlies their agitation. The evil which they denounce unhappily exists, and even their violent and distempored imaginations can hard. Sze-hop-chan to travelling trader. ly exaggerate its magnitude. It may be reaconable to resist the tyransical measures which | chong to travelling trader. the total abstainers are anxious to impose upon the country, but it is idle to pretend that the Kwong-yuet-loy to travelling trader. country is in this respect in a satisfactory condition. It is scarcely a consulation to be told that the vast increase in the expenditure on intoxicating liquous is a proof of the prosperity loong to travelling trader. of the nation. It is doubtful whether the prosent high rates of wage, will be maintained; Yuet-hing loong to local-trader. but, if they fall, the passion for stimulants which has already been developed will unfortunately remain. Anyhody who reads the police reports will see the steady increase of cauce of brutal assaults, especially on women, which may be traced to drinking. The present "genml" a son bas been appropriately calebruted-a woman supping with her husband and friend suddenly flung out of window; a man stabbed by his wife, a wife by her husband, a girl by her sweetheart. "Thank God Christmas, is over !" we heard a poor woman say the other day, as she stoadied her staggering husband up the steps of a railway station.

We are quite of one mind with the Bishop of Peterborough that, if it is necessary to choose, freedom is better than sobriety; but it is not impossible for people to be free and sober too. The criminal statistics compiled by the police show an increase of more than forty per cent. in the convictions for drunkenness before the magistrates in England and Wales in 1871 as compared with the average of the previous ten years. The Excise and Customs returns show a vast increase in the consumption of all kinds of drink, and especially of spirits. . The country has been thriving, wages have been high, and the surplus carnings have been spent. chiefly in liquor. These are not pleasant facts, and they bardly confirm those pretty theories of social progress of which we hear so much. But progress has been said to be like a wave which sometimes seems to retire even in the course of advancing, and this may perhaps be only one of the backward movements of social improvement. As far as we can sec, there is nothing to be done in the matter except to direct attention to the facts, and leave them to make their impression on the public mind. It is reserved nowadays, for the working man to get drunk in the old way, "like a lord," but the other classes, though they bear themselves more discreetly, suffer for their potations in other ways. Brandy and sods, bitter ale, and glasses of aberry, nips, and pegs, and drams, keep up a perpetual irritation and excitement which, added to the cares and worries of business and the fatigues of social life. wear out the nerves, and are apt to end in hysteria or paralysis. The doctors, who are aware of the spreading evil, might do much to check it, and their duty in the matter was certainly not exhausted by the signing of the declaration of a year ago. " Hard hes for poor settlers who have perhaps add all they possessed, or borrowed, or depend on charity for the means of getting to a country which owes much of its prosperity to settlers from other lands. . We saw an illustration of the troubles of this class in the case of a poor woman and child, who swere turned out of the car in which secondclass passengers were riding, and would have to wait at a wayside station nearly a day for the emigrant train. Many such, with children, have to spend wearisome days and nights on hard boards, with perhaps scanty food, before they reach their destinations in the Western States, where they are going earich railroad companies by the cultivation of their lands and the new territories of the States. In reference to this class of travel lers, and to all the humbler classes; the English system offers decided advantages over the American. The spirited example set by the Midland Company, last April, and copied by nearly all others, of Third-class by all trains, has been the greatest boon ever offered to the large class of travellers whose road companies, and they cannot afford to becoming maidens, negroes of every shade of manner.
